

A NEW CONTENDER IN CHARTER SECURITY'S SEARCH FOR AUSTRALIA'S DUMBEST CROOK.

And now our attention turns to Adam Ramsay. Adam is quite probably the apple of his mother's eye. And probably his father's only joy. So they will be pleased to hear he is in contention to win Charter Security's Australia's Dumbest Crook competition. In fact the bookies have him at short odds to take home the major prize.

In May this year Adam stole a $355,000 Ferrari from Crown Casino. It didn't take months of planning or a devious plot, both of which, we suspect, are beyond Adam. He just asked for the keys and some plonker at Crown handed them over. And away went Adam, crunching the gears and asking himself how many fat mates he could cram into a Ferrari and banging his head on the roof as he went over speed humps.

Now the place to hide a Ferrari that isn't as yours as it could be is in Toorak, or Brighton, or South Yarra. At a pinch, East Melbourne, where you might be mistaken for a sporty doctor. But the Golden Rule of Ferrari theft is this: you must never, ever, ever take a hot F430 Spider into Broadmeadows. No one in Broadmeadows has ever seen one. And when they do see one they either think, "Aliens have landed," or "Bernie Ecclestone is lost" or, more likely, "There goes a stolen Ferrari being driven by a fool."

Adam ignored the Golden Rule and drove his new Ferrari into Broadmeadows, where he became as conspicuous as a couple of rhinos mating outside a KFC. Having got away with this he became more brazen.

He drove the Ferrari to the Broadmeadows Police Station to report for bail on a previous offence. I'll write that again. He drove to Broadmeadows Police Station to report for bail... in a missing $355,000 car. Arise, Sir Adam, prince of Knuckleheads. Go to gaol. Go directly to gaol. Do not pass Crown Casino or The Broadmeadows Police Station.

Charter Security would like to offer Adam, and all our other contestants in The Hunt For Australia's Dumbest Crook a free vasectomy. Because we worry that if crooks this dumb start breeding, our industry is at risk. They catch themselves.

For those of you who have problems with crooks smarter than Adam, and that's virtually all of them, call Charter Security. We're trained to make them all look dumb.
